SUSPENSION INTEGRITY

Your skeleton provides the structure to hold up your weight. Your joints cushion you as you walk and allow you to change direction.

Your vehicle's suspension system is similar: It bears the weight of your vehicle, absorbs bumps in the road and controls the body as you steer.

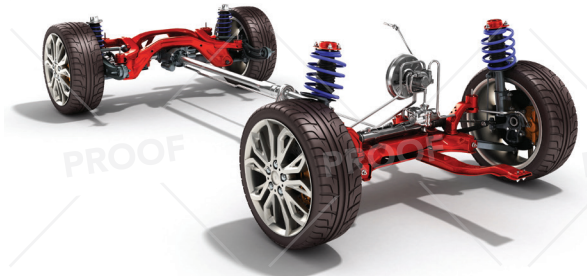

Like the bones in your body, suspension parts are connected by joints that allow all the components to move as they should. Over time and miles, the joints start to wear, and your suspension gets loose and doesn't operate as precisely as before, reducing proper tire contact with the road. An accident, pothole or hitting a curb or rock can also damage or break suspension components.

If you've ever hurt your foot, you know you've had to walk differently to keep it from hurting as bad. Do that long enough and your ankle, knee, hip and even your back will start to hurt from the strain of not moving normally. The same thing happens in your vehicle when one joint or part is worn or damaged: it stresses everything else and causes premature wear to the whole system.

Signs of suspension problems include uneven tire wear, vibration, rattles, or clunks when you hit a bump or turn, or the vehicle pulls to one side.

There's nothing quite like the feeling of driving down the road and, suddenly, the back end of your vehicle collapses. A possible cause is that something in your suspension has broken. Suspension components gradually wear out - you may not even notice the ride and handling slowly getting worse. But a sudden failure is unnerving and will often leave you unable to drive your vehicle.

A broken spring can cause your suspension to drop suddenly. There are different types of springs, including coil springs, leaf springs, and air springs. Most vehicles these days use coil springs, and they look just like you think they'd look: a coiled-up metal spring like what you'd find if you took apart a ballpoint pen.

Coil springs fail from rust (thanks, brine, and road salt), trauma (think potholes, speed bumps, curbs) and just plain metal fatigue.

Another type of spring that can suddenly fail is an air spring. Air springs are rubber bags that hold pressurized air. They have an air compressor, an air reservoir, and height sensors. The advantage of an air suspension is that you can adjust the ride height, level loads, adjust handling characteristics, and lower the vehicle to make it easier to get in and out.

Eventually, the rubber in an air spring can rot out, or the airbag can be punctured causing the air to leak out all at once. Not only can the corner of the vehicle with the failed air spring drop suddenly, but it's also possible for the entire air system to lose air, allowing the vehicle to drop. Plus, compressors, solenoids, air lines, and sensors can also fail.

If you suspect a suspension problem, ask your Auto Select service advisor to have your suspension system inspected. They can also check your alignment while they're at it. Taking care of a worn or damaged suspension component early, will head off future damage and expense down the road.

May

TRIVIA

The Empire State Building opened its doors on May 1, 1931.

May is a surprisingly good month for US presidents. Every other month of the year, at least one US president has died, but never in May!

The birthstone of May is the emerald.

May has two birth flowers - the Lily-of-the-Valley and the Hawthorn.

May has some pretty interesting month-long observances. In the US, May is National Burger Month, Older Americans Month and National Military Appreciation Month.

May is the month that the Eurovision song contest is held every year. For those that do not know, Eurovision is an international song contest that has been held every year since 1956. Some of the contest winners over the years have gone on to be incredibly successful groups, with the most notable being ABBA!
